Julianne M. Morath, RN, MS, CPPS

Guest Speaker

Course Description & Target Audience:

This presentation is built on lessons from the right consequences industry to outline the practices and conditions for creating psychological safety in the procedural operating environment. Audience: Surgeons, Anesthesiologists, and surgical staff.

Objectives:

1. Define psychological safety
2. Identify 2 essential skills to build trust and psychological safety
3. Identify how a culture of psychological safety enables learning, improvement, and teamwork
4. Identify one change you can personally make to advance RCHSD as the premier pediatric surgical program

Julie Morath has devoted her extensive career to advancing safety and quality in healthcare, from bedside to national policy. She brings more than three decades of executive and academic experience, including 14 years with pediatric healthcare delivery, quality and safety systems. Her mission is to assure a competent, resilient, and empowered healthcare community that both earns and deserves respect and that derives meaning and joy in their work. Her methods and expertise include creating cultures of safety, designing reliability into operations, and promoting workforce engagement. She helps clients bring discovery and innovation to both clinical practice and the structures and mechanisms that support patient care. Her work is distinguished by her ability to align stakeholders toward a common purpose, create partnerships with patients, families and community advocates, and design solutions for continuous improvement.
